Artists may not be forced to create art expressing an opinion with which they disagree — U.S. Supreme Court.

From FIRE’s statement ... on the Supreme Court decision in 303 Creative v. Elenis: ‘Freedom of conscience is a fundamental individual right: The First Amendment protects our right not to speak, too, and the government cannot force Americans to voice its preferred message on pain of punishment. Today’s decision recognizes that just as the First Amendment protects students in our public schools from discipline for refusing to pledge allegiance to the flag, so too does it protect the right of artists to voice only those messages they wish to express, without risking government-imposed fines and “remedial training.”’

An Education Revolution ... posted by Carl Barney ... 26 Jun 2023 [links added by editor]

I was having dinner with Peter Diamandis ... the founder of XPrize ... (an exciting organization—Google it), and I asked him what his next big moonshots were. He said: education and healthcare.

“So, you want to reform education in America?” I asked. “No,” he said, “I want to crush it and replace it.” I asked him how he was going to accomplish that and he responded: “Artificial intelligence and virtual reality will revolutionize education.” He described a philosophy course where, through virtual reality and AI, you could actually talk to Socrates in the Greek Agora, asking questions of him and any other philosopher, and getting their answers.

But this is not something for the future—it already exists and is being refined.

from above: “... a philosophy course where, through virtual reality and AI, you could actually talk to Socrates in the Greek Agora, asking questions of him and any other philosopher, and getting their answers.”

I have just had a conversation with an AI representing itself as F. A. Hayek. I gave it my definition of freeorder and asked if the concept would be useful? The answer was intelligent, and was what I would expect from Hayek. -ls [  Anas Khan]

Authority means less and less, reputation and integrity mean more and more. —Robert Gore

David Hock writes: “Another SLL [StraightLineLogic.com] gem. Some excerpts that jumped out at me: “... these wizards of woo woo ran into a buzz saw of people who had real domain expertise outside the walled gardens of academic endeavor and the pattycake peer review of friendly guild systems. they came from a world where one has to actually be right for a living, not just socialized and credentialed ...

“...it has succeeded because it retained sufficient reputation to gaslight society into being too frightened, too alienated, and too intimidated to challenge it. but it was all woo-woo, a kung fu theater of phony facility. it’s all flash, no substance; it’s all hat, no cowboy.

“the true power of woo-woo lies in making you too afraid to challenge it....”

This week we are launching www.longevityplaybook.com that is the culmination of all of my research with our 10-doctor scientific advisory board. We truly believe that we can help individuals to not only slow the clock on aging, but to support the reverse of growing older, making it possible for people to live younger longer. You will learn in our web and mobile application how to do the incrementally important things that can truly affect change inside of your body. [👤Patrick Cox]

Reversion to Youthfulness by Plasma Dilution

“Aging is a universal process of physiological and molecular changes that are strongly associated with susceptibility to disease and ultimately death. Experiments in murine models of parabiosis have demonstrated that heterochronic blood sharing leads to multi-tissue rejuvenation. ... The intuitive conclusion that factors in young blood are responsible for the rejuvenation is challenged by the observation that using age-neutral saline as a replacement fluid, and not adding but just replenishing the albumin lost by the procedure, achieves or exceeds the rejuvenation effects observed in the parabiosis model.” —“Attenuation of age-elevated blood factors by repositioning plasmapheresis: A novel perspective and approach” - https://www.trasci.com/article/S1473-0502\(21\)00128-2/fulltext00128-2/fulltext) - [Patrick Cox]

Journal of Special Jurisdictions ... call for papers ...

This call for papers invites researchers and scholars to explore the impact of special jurisdictions on multiple aspects, economic, political, social, technological and even environmental. Possible topics of interest include, but are not limited to:

- The impact that special jurisdictions have had on economic freedom, individual liberty, and free-market capitalism, and how they may help to promote or hinder free-market values.
- The economic impact of special jurisdictions on local and national economies, including their impact on innovation, entrepreneurship, job creation, and foreign direct investment.
- The legal and regulatory framework of special jurisdictions and its impact on businesses, including the role of property rights, contracts, and dispute resolution mechanisms.
- The political and social implications of special jurisdictions on local communities and the nations as a whole, including their impact on labor standards, environmental protection, social welfare, and public policy.
- The role of special jurisdictions in promoting international trade, including their impact on trade policy, tariffs, and non-tariff barriers.
- The challenges and opportunities for businesses operating in special jurisdictions, including issues related to governance, corruption, and access to finance.
- The comparison of special jurisdictions in different countries and regions, and their impact on the ease of doing business.

The Habit of Regulation and Cultural Suicide

Impulsive regulation inhibits the development of cultural immune systems. The ability to distinguish truth and error disappears. Monotonic sources of distinction are established, are maintained by compulsion, and become available for sale to the highest bidder. As populations weaken and descend into idiocy lying for profit flourishes. -ls

The Gods Send Thread for the Web Begun

from an ancient Greek source*

Joseph Frazier Wall, writes of Carnegie’s last home, built in New York City:

In his magnificent library-study on the first floor, seated at a roll top desk so huge that it had had to be constructed inside the room, Carnegie, his feet barely able to touch the floor, would sit, contemplating how best to dispose of his wealth. All around him, carved into the wood paneling of the walls, were the slogans that had inspired him throughout his life: high above the mantle of the fireplace, "Let There Be

Light," and directly below that the words which he had first seen as a young man in the Stoke's Library in Greensburg, Pennsylvania, and which he had vowed would some day be in a library of his:

*He that cannot reason is a fool,
He that will not is a bigot,
He that dares not is a slave.*

Running around the walls of the room like a frieze carved out of Poor Richard's Almanac were the words: "The Kindom of Heaven is Within You," "The Gods Send Thread For The Web Begun," "All Is Well Since All Grows Better," "The Aids To A Noble Life Are All Within," and "Thine Own Reproach Alone Do Fear." It was difficult to be other than noble in such a room.

"The 'I' in BIPOC: Not all Native Americans are leftist political activists" ... Sherman Alexie

"I'd argue that leftist political activists are only a small percentage of the Native demographic. I would posit that the basic Native political identity is ethnocentric, mainstream Democrat, capitalist, socially moderate, remarkably magnanimous, and only intermittently passionate. In other words, the Native American world is very...American."

"After all, who has more reason to be contemptuous of the United States government than an Indian? It makes a certain amount of political sense that an Indian, especially a reservation Indian, might choose to become a small government libertarian or an anti-government right winger."

"Indian tribes are land-based and have (tenuous) control over vast resources. And they have complex constitutional rights that sometimes go beyond what even privileged Americans possess."
